Soviet Man Takes A Walk to West -Across Finland

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 30 (UPI) — Viktor Bublik's ambition was to sail the Atlantic alone, but first he had to get out of the Soviet Union - so he walked out.

In an interview today with the oewspaper Expressen, Mr. Bublik, 32, said he fled his country by creeping through a drainage pipe at the high-security Soviet-Finnish border and then walking through Finland

Mr. Bublik, who earlier had abandoned three escape attempts, said a book he read gave him the urge to be the first Soviet sailor to cross

"I dreamed of it all the time but realized the only way for me to accomplish it was to flee the Soviet Union," he said.

Worked as Lumberjack

After his unsuccessful attempts, Mr. Bublik took a job as a lumberjack in Soviet Karelia to plan the 370-mile, 18-day walk. He left his job at the end of June, but stayed in the region, posing as a tourist.

Mr. Bublik said he practiced using a compass and a detailed map, but took only a pocket map for his flight, "since I would have been charged with spying if I had been caught with the other map."

He starved himself for 12 days to learn how to combat hunger. For the trip he packed bread, cancel milk, dry soups, eight tins of tea and

Leased Duds New Wrinkle in Exec Perks

By Robert D. Hershey Jr. LONDON, Oct. 30 (NYT) -No longer do you have in be a policeman or football player bere to have the boss buy your work clothes. You can be an ordinary businessman partial to threepiece suits, made-to-measure shirts and regimental ties. In an effort to keep Britain's underpaid, overtaxed managers loyal and well dressed, more than 40 companies have begun in supply them with the latest perqui-site wrinkle — the clothes on their backs. "We're in a bit of a desperate state in this country," said Alec Finch, of Hilditch & Key Ltd., a leading St. James's emporium that bas been making shirts for clubmen and other wealthy Englishmen since 1899.

"By the time the British execu-tive has paid his taxes, the poor devil hasn't got much left." Though some may regard the idea as outdated corporate pater-nalism or perhaps as the ultimate in capitalist exploitation, it is just

At $20,000 a year a Briton is in the 50 percent tax bracket and 83 percent of anything over $48,000 goes straight to the government.

Hilditch & Key, which has formalized the clothes perk, says some 500 companies have ex-pressed interest in the plan it de-vised in mid-September and that only one of them has decided definitely not to offer it to ft works like this. The employer tells senior employees they may go to the shop and pick out, say, $750 worth of bespoke clothes. This would cover one suit and half a dozen shirts.

The company then only the articles and leases them to the emplovee at a nominal 2½ percent a year, or $18.75. At the end of the stipulated period, typically two years for items, the company may take the clothes back and give them to charity, or it may give or sell them to the man who's been wearing them.

In any case, all or most of the cost qualifies as a deductible business expense. Since the Inland Revenue now assesses clothes at 10 percent of their cost, the employee pays tax-es only at this level minus the lease payment, or 7½ percent. Hilditch & Key does all the

The plan was inspired when Hilditch & Key found an alarming switch in its mix of customers. Ten years ago more than half of them were English but now about 75 percent of them are from abroad - American, West German, French and Arab. This meant not only that there was a less stable base for its business, Mr. Finch said, but shoddily dressed Englishmen hurt the country's reputation for superior tailoring. System Dîsliked

The union asked, "Who has financed these armies? Who has

All three local black political groups have outside sources of funding, ranging from conservative Arab interests in the case of Chief Chirau's group to church groups and foreign multinational companies in the cases of Mr. Sithole and Bishop Muzorewa.

3 Major Unions Join Walkout at Italian Hospitals

ROME, Oct. 30 (Reuters) - Hospitals in Italy faced a worsening strike today as auxiliary staff belonging to the three major unions began a 24-hour stoppage. Their ac-tion was in sympathy with workers in smaller autonomous unions who have been on strike since rejecting a new contract on Oct. 5.

Striking workers include cleaners, medical auxiliaries, and cater-ing staff. Since the dispute began, patients have had to endure unchanged linen, meals prepared in military field kitchens, and reduced care. Many patients have gone home, and inquiries have started into the deaths of two children, possibly because of the reduced ser-

479 Said to Die In India of Virus

NEW DELHI, Oct. 30 (UPI) -A virus disease reported in parts of northern India has taken 479 lives in the last month, officials said yesterday.

The disease, suspected to be a type of encephalitis, has killed 445 persons in Uttar Pradesh, India's most populous state, which neighbors New Delhi, radio reports said. Unofficial reports, however, placed the toll in Uttar Pradesh at between 1,000 and 2,000.

Twenty-seven persons have died of the disease in the second most populous state, Bihar, officials said. The disease has killed seven per-sons, mostly children, in the last week in New Delhi, according to press reports.

He denied that the declaration calls for censorship and state con-trol over the media. But he did not read that passage when he delivcred his speech.

On Saturday, Finland became the first nation at the conference to ask for a revision of the declaration. Until then, speakers during the general debate had praised the declaration, which has won wide attention, protests, and praise since it was proposed.

Egypt Probes Allegations That Ex-Aide Was Bribed

former deputy prime minister accused of taking more than $300,000 in bribes from the Westinghouse Corp. of America in return for arranging contracts here.

According to Cairo press reports, the U.S. government notified Premier Mustafa Khalil that Ahmed Sultan, the minister of power and electricity until early this month all electricity until early this month, al-legedly had taken the payoffs in return for awarding two contracts worth at least $30 million to pro-vide electrical equipment for vide electrical equipment for Egypt's power plants.

The charges come at a time when Mr. Khalil, who has held office for less than a month, is determined to present a fresh image of government honesty and hard work during Egypt's transition to peace. For this reason, he is expected to press the case to a conclusion rather than let it evaporate as sometimes haplet it evaporate as sometimes happened in the past.

The same day that he received the reports, Mr. Khalil asked the U.S. ambassador here to forward further details. A statement on Thursday said that he also directed the prosecutor-general and the so-cialist prosecutor-general to look into the charges. The inclusion of the socialist prosecutor-general is significant because he customarily handles political offenses, which include the abuse of public office to illegally accumulate wealth.

Mr. Sultan, when he was reached by reporters here, denied any wrongdoing and called the bribery allegations unfounded.

Relatively few high public offi-cials have been punished for bribery in the past despite periodic rumors, but Mr. Sultan seems likely to be made an example if he is convicted. Under Egyptian law, he could not only forfeit the alleged bribes, which have been reckoned at $322,000, but could also face imprisonment and a heavy fine.

Mr. Sultan was among nearly a score of ministers removed from Fare Increases Approved for Flights in U.S.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30 (AP) -The Civil Aeronautics Board has given airlines permission to in-crease by 3.2 percent their ceiling prices for domestic air fares, starting next month.

All major U.S. airlines except Delta had asked the CAB for a 2.5 percent increase. That means that lares on those airlines will go up by at least 2.5 percent. Most of the increases will be effective Nov. 10. The standard fare of $88 for a between New Y cago, for instance, will increase to $90.20. And the standard $220 fare between New York and Los Angeles will rise to $225.50. Any airline choosing to raise fares the full 3.2 percent could charge $90.82 between New York and Chicago and $227.04 between New York and Los Angeles. It is possible for airlines to increase their fares even further, under a recent board ruling that allows in-creases of up to 10 percent and price cuts of up to 70 percent of the new rate, without board approval. The new rates do not apply to various discount fares.

3-4 Years of Expensive Abundance Possible

Glut Held Likely to Cloud Carter's Hard-Won Gas Bill

By J.P. Smith

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30 (WP) With the ink hardly dry on his hard-fought bill giving natural gas producers higher prices, President Carter is facing an awkward prospect: a natural gas glut

The glut may be brief - that depends to a certain extent on how the price deregulation law works in practice - hut a wide range of experts believes it could be lengthy.

"One of the prospects we seriously face is a natural gas glut," said Jay Kennedy, head of the Electricity Consumers Resource Council, a Washington coalition of maor industrial energy users.

At the Energy Department, an administration policymaker said.

"We have a gas glut oow that could run on for three or four years."

Description Disputed

Oil industry executives bristle at the term "glut," particularly begas bill they had maintained that without higher prices the cation would face a loog-term shortage.
"It prefer to call it a bubble," said Bud Lawrence, president of the American Gas Association.

Undeniably, there has been a dramatic change in the gas outlook. Uoul a few months ago, most gas companies were not allowing new industrial hookups, and as recently as two years ago, papers such as The New York Times and The Washington Post warned that a gas shortage posed a fundamental loogterm economic threat.

than $2 per 1,000 cubic feet, some-

Higher gas prices under the Carter bill will bring much of those "shut-in" supplies onto the market now, according to Energy Secretary

James Schlesinger. Since the quadrupling of oil prices in 1973, oilmen have drilled more wells and have found more gas in the process, especially in new exploration areas such as the socalled Overthrust Belt in Wyoming. This new production is just begin-ning to find its way to the market.

 Canada and Mexico have made major natural gas discoveries in recent years and are considering the possibility of sharply increasing gas exports to the United States. Canada now provides 5 percent of U.S. gas, and Mexico much less. Some oil experts, however, say that oew discoveries in Canada and Mexico could raise that amount to as much as 10 percent if political hurdles can be cleared.

Ottawa Must Act

Applications for increased Canadian exports are awaiting approval by Canada's National Energy Board, and a major Mexican gas deal - possibly the first of several — is being delayed because Mr. Schlesinger has balked at peggiog gas prices to heating oil. The price, starting at about $2.60 per 1,000 cubic feet, would be the highest paid in the world for conventional natural gas flowing across borders.

The major question about how long the glut lasts hinges, largely, on the rate at which industrial users shift to gas.

That, in turn, will be a function of price. The more prices rise, the more industries will turn to alternative fuels and the longer the surplus

Chile Calls Elections in Trade Unions

By Juan de Onis

SANTIAGO. Oct. 30 (NYT) -Chile's military regime has suddenly called elections for trade union eaders to head off the threat of an international boycott against trade

The elections, to be held tomorrow for lubor delegates represent-ing about 2 million workers, are the first since the armed forces overthrew the leftist government of President Salvador Allende in 1973.

During five years of military rule, unions have been repressed whenever labor disputes have arisen. At the big copper mine at Chuquicamata, where a prote movement began among the 10,000 workers last month, 72 employees were arrested and military law was imposed to end the demand for

Last week, Minister of Interior
Sergio Fernandez announced the annulment of seven labor federations, which represent 529 local unions with an estimated memberahip of more than 300,000 workers. because the leadership was Communist. These leaders have been io their positions since the military took power because no elections were permitted. Many have been arrested and some have been dismissed or gone into exile.

The U.S. labor movement (AFL-C10), after giving initial support to the Chilean military because of its anti-Communist character, has become more critical of the restriction of labor rights.

Repression Condemned

Unemployment is officially 13 percent, and in some major industrial areas, such as Concepcion, it is as high as 20 percent. Salaries have been reduced by more than 25 per-cent since the military took power.

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, sent a letter in August to President Carter saying that, if Chile did oot allow workers to exercise their union rights. U.S. unions would support "effective international action" against the Bishop Myers, who was the only white priest with Martin Luther King Jr. in the black leader's first Washington, D.C. march, came to California 12 years ago.

U.S. labor sources said this meant that the U.S. unions would back an international boycott against transport of Chilean products, such as perishable fruits and vegetables, or copper, the main export here, or refuse to service Chilean aircraft in U.S. airports. European unions are prepared to join such action, the labor sources said.

Election Restrictions

The call for elections, announced Minister of Labor Vasco Costa Friday, bars all present labor ders from election. There can be no lists of candidates or campaign-ing in the work centers. Broadcasts Are Key Weapon

Vietnam, Cambodia Boost Radio Propaganda War

By George McArthur

BANGKOK, Oct. 30 - The Cambodian radio startled its listeners last week with the news that a new weapon — the automatic crossbow — was being used against the Vietnamese The broadcast said that automatic-firing crossbows had been used to defeat a Vietnamese regiment that had crossed the border into the northeastern province of Ratanaki-

Noting that the Vietnamese had modern Soviet arms, the broadcast said. "We are using our modern weapons [from China] in combina-tion with bamboo stakes, automatic-firing crossbows, traps and pisonous arrows to crush the Viet-namese intruders with efficacy and success." It added that many Vietnamese were hit by poisonous arrows and spears.

Intelligence analysts wondered why the Cambodians were bragging about using crossbows, spears and poisoned arrows. Did it mean that they were suffering from an ammunition shortage and were indi-rectly signaling their Chinese backers for more help?

One explanation is that the broadcast was aimed at young Viet-namese draftees, many of whom have little stomach for the war with Cambodia. Fighting in the jungles of Ratanakiri, the Vietnamese troops might just find crossbows, spears and poisoned arrows as terrifying as machine guns or rockets.

Implications Important

To observers who regularly listen propaganda broadcasts from Phnom Penh and Hanoi, such implications are often more important than whether the reported border skirmish actually took place. Indeed, it is highly likely that the battle never happened, and, if it did, it was almost certainly smaller than Radio Phnom Penh suggested If the Vietnamese fled in panic, at the broadcast said, they must have recovered quickly, for mother bat, the was reported the next day in roughly the same place.

Both Hanoi and Phnom Penh re- il ort several such clashes daily. Ra-V dio Phnom Penh says that they take place inside Cambodia, with the intruders being beaten without compunction." Radio Hanoi places the clashes inside Vietnam and gives the Vietnamese victory. Very few reports can be verified, although U.S. electronic monitoring from satellites and other sources sometimes can confirm the bat-tles and pinpoint the time and place. This information comes from intercepted ground radio communidications, and U.S. officials are rehotant to talk about it publicly. Privately, some say that such inter-cepts are not all that revealing. This leaves the official broadcasts as the major sources of infor-mation about the border war.

The outbreak of open conflict, for instance, was telegraphed by Radio Phnom Penh long before the Vietnamese invasion of December, 1977, precipitated the break in relations between the two conotries Phnom Penh did not directly name the Victnamese, but railed against "territory-annexing enemies.

closed the plots and coup attempts now known to have taken place ir. Cambodia in 1977. The Vietnames conservatively cited only three such instances. The Cambodians now admit to seven. Sometimes the radios give myste:

nous clues. Early last year, expert pondered the recurring reference into Cambodian broadcasts to "enemie. of all stripes." That turned out to be the signa' for a major purge in Cambodia of all the veteran Communist Particadre who had been trained to Viernam and were tained by association. It is estimated that about 5,000 were executed. Sometimes the clues are clearer

Radio Hanoi has recently begun w refer to liberated zones in Cambo dia. A defector was quoted recenti-as saying, "We have quickly em barked on building grass-roots of ganizations in the liberated zones."

One of Vietnam's aims may be to justify whatever military action i might take.

Although neither radio has much genuine credibility, Hanoi Radio i generally taken more seriously by outsiders because Hanoi has beer at it longer, generally refrains from patently ridiculous claims and r usually more sophisticated and reasonable.

Radio Phnom Penh is given to broadcasting fantastic casualty figures. Stalinist rhetoric about scething enthusiasm and unbridge and control of the control dled virulence against all things Vietnamese. The output of Radic Phnom Penh has increased measurably to the past year.

Within the past several weeks the intensity of the radio war has created the impression of a new peak of violence in the border war. The Cambodians have reported widespread Vietnamese attacks most of which are doubted by Western analysts. The Vietnamese are reporting a wave of insurrection inside Cambodia. Intelligence analysts are also skeptical about that.

The independent intelligence in-dicates that the actual fighting has not been significant for several weeks. This full probably will continue until the dry season begins in late. late November or early December. Then, it is believed, the Vietnamese will begin a new offensive. The expected escalation of the war when the dry season arrives is what the radio war now is all that elections in Rhodesia - the elections that were to mark a major stage of the turnover of power to the black majority - will probably be postponed, comes as no surprise to those who never trusted Smith, the man who initially blocked the emergence of Zimbabwe as a black version of white-ruled Rhodesia. Nor, for that matter, will it be startling to those who believed that the black guerrillas of the Patriotic Front, those who ruled out a black-white confrontation except on the oattlefield, would prevent any rational approach to the Rhodesian problem.

For it is never easy to carry on an election while war rages around the polls, especially. when it is a war of secrecy and surprise. Moreover, each day in which the Patriotic Front and the Salisbury government trade off raids and massacres adds to the problem; reading about the Reconstruction period in the United States after the Civil War can easily confirm that.

But it is not only the Rhodesian regime who will surely find it hard to push the concept of Zimbabwe as the internal struggle sharpens - for the blacks, whites and inbetweens are facing issues of property ownership, management, education, social, economic and political relations, stemming not only from white colonization but from older tribal wars. The Price of Pride

The dollar isn't what it used to be, but it is still worth thinking about. Or should be.

Two chess players meet in the Philippines to decide the world championship. The purse is $550,000. They play for 92 days, and the purse is closer to $700,000. The reason is that the money was invested in Swiss francs when they started to play. The franc went up. The dollar went down.

President Carter outlines a program to curb inflation with voluntary wage and price guidelines. No sooner is he off the television screen than the dollar hits a new low on the Tokyo money exchange,

A visitor from Europe asks, over lunch, why Americans seem to care so little about the value of their dollar when the people of it Europe care so deeply, and worry so much about how it affects their lives. It is clear from the tone of voice that the real question is: "Have you no pride?"

It is a good question, and there are no good clean answers. Obviously, part of the reason is that the United States is so strong that Americans do not think of themselves as being vulnerable to some money changer thousands of miles away. It is not so much isolationism as insulationism.

Another part of the answer is that government officials do not seem alarmed, and Americans tend to take their cues from Washington on big, mysterious problems. such as the dollar. A federal economist explains that the dollar is being driven down by speculators who are, at heart, no different from the gamblers at a Las Vegas table, calling for one more card. The people at the table do not gamble on the economic health of the casino, but only oo the next card and so it is, he says, with the money traders.

Surely, part of the answer is that the picture is confusing. Another economist says the dollar is dropping in value because the United States, in effect, has scattered about $400 billion worth of IOUs around the world in foreign banks and foreign-based multinational corporations. It is adding IOUs at the rate of $18 billion this year because it is importing oil and cars and other goods that are worth more than its exports. There is a glut of dollars, or IOUs, in foreign banks, and that makes the people holding them nervous.

But the two explanations finally converge. The government economist, trying to illustrate how little there is to worry about and how capricious the dollar market is, points out that the dollar would be stronger if the United States had a recession. Why? Because imports would go down. That is the rub. Every time someone in the United States turns on an auto ignition key, oil imports go up, the balance of trade tilts further against the country, the dollar drops in value, gasoline costs more. As the dollar drops in value, foreign car companies charge more for the automobiles that they ship to the United States. When those prices go up, the prices of U.S. cars go up.

That is the inflationary pattern that the president is trying to break with his program of wage and price guidelines. It is the pattern that he was trying to break with his original energy program, which was designed to reduce oil imports to a point where U.S. exports would come closer to balancing the value of its imports.

Financial technicians can tinker with the world economy and spare the dollar from some further slippage with changes in interest rates or the purchase of excess dollars to reduce the glut, But, for the long pull, only a reduction in the rate of U.S. inflation and a determined conservation effort to hold down oil imports will stop the damage.

Not only money is involved. The European visitor's unspoken question is valid. It is a matter of pride, a matter of this country's prestige and authority in the world.

It makes us wish that there were fewer people rummaging around in the president's proposals looking for loopholes, and more of them looking for ways to make the plan -or something like it — work.

Mission to Japan

The largest U.S. trade mission ever to visit Japan has returned, and judging by the results we are either going to have to reincarnate Commodore Perry or send a lot more missioos before there is any significant open-ing-up of that country to U.S. goods.

Indeed, a delegation of 20 to 50 U.S. congressmen, which also is likely to be the largest delegation of its kind, will visit Japan later this year with that objective in mind.

According to the U.S. Commerce Department, which shepherded the hopeful businessmen, about half of the 68 companies taking part in the trade mission developed 'good prospects" and 17 of them concluded contracts with Japanese firms. However, the other half were unsuccessful in their attempts to sell their products.

To hear the Japanese tell it, the Americans aren't really trying very bard. For example, only one of the companies on the mission bothered to priot a sales brochure in Japa-

Shortly before the trip, the quasi-govern-mental Japan External Trade Organization released a report showing that since 1970 the U.S. share of the Japanese market bas declined across the board while the share of European and developing countries has increased.

Japan racked up a $14-billion surplus over its worldwide trading partners last year and probably will exceed that figure this year. Out of five million color-television sets sold in Japan in 1976, only 452 were imported — and this small number wasn't due to the fact that the foreign-made TVs couldn't pick up Japanese-language broadcasts.

Not until the Japanese begin to relax their complex system of tariffs, quotas, rules and regulations which artificially excludes foreign goods will U.S. companies be able to make a real effort to crack the Japanese market.

PARIS — The move to readjust Germany's debt to the nations that were Allies in the Great War of 1914-18 is gaining in force. Yet Germany's external debt remains a crushing weight - not so crushing indeed that with frugality and a high sense of honor it might not in sixty-two years be able to discharge it, but a dead burden, nevertheless, and a cause of persistant irritation for its people and consequently for international relations. The present change of sentiment, in the spirit of the Locarno agreements, must have a profound significance.

Lost Ground in Namibia

By Tom Wicker

South-West Africa People's Organization and the front-line African states have so far rejected the Western "compromise" with South Africa on independence for Namibia. They are being asked to accept a much less promising arrangement than South Africa had agreed to just a few months ago, and one that will oot oecessarily lead to inde-

British sources reluctantly that the agreement oegotiated by five Western foreign ministers with South Africa's tough new prime minister, Pieter Botha, at least "kept open the door" to an internationally acceptable settlement. But they add that such a settlement was by no means "guaranteed."

On the other hand, the British insist, the latest arrangement is the best that could have been worked out after Botha's predecessor, John Vorster - who may have fallen oo the Namibian issue - abruptly canceled the first independence plan. It called for United Nationssupervised elections next year in Namibia (called South-West Africa in Pretoria, which has had working control of the buge territory since World War 1).

Just before stepping down, Var-ster publicly repudiated the UN plan and announced that South Africa would conduct its own internal elections in Namibia in December. The nationalist SWAPO will oot compete in such an election, which will be won handily by the Demo-cratic Turnhalle Alliance (DTA), a conservative party closely linked to South Africa and including most of Namibia's white settlers.

U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, Foreign Minister David Owen of Britain and their counterparts from Canada, France and West Germany — the group that proposed the original plan — went to South Africa to salvage what they could of it. They did oo! really expect to get Botha to reverse Vorster, but hoped to keep alive the possibility of an internationally acceptable independence procedure in which SWAPO could partici-

What they got, after three days of hard bargaining, was confirma-tion that South Africa would insist on its internal elections in December, with the inevitable DTA victo-- but also agreement for the ty — but also agreement to UN then to proceed with its internationally supervised election. As it is understood here, the compromise specifically includes South African intent to have the DTA compete in the UN elections only as a political party, not as a Namibian government, and to accept the outcome.

It's probably true that winning the December elections would give the DTA additional prestige for the contest with SWAPO, but British sources believe that South Africa's acceptance of this compromise signals Pretoria's continuing, if grudging interest io an internationally acceptable solution. In this view, strong white resistance in Namibia to the original plan had swung the South African Capinet against it at about the same time Vorster decided to resign for reasons of bealth.

This may be tinged with wishful thinking. Some South African sources believe that a SWAPO government in Namibia never bas been acceptable in Pretoria, which regards the organization as being Communist and fears it would let its vast territory be used as a sanc-tuary for guerrillas attacking South Africa. In this view, the original plan for UN elections was accepted only because it was believed SWAPO feared losing an election too much to take part.

When the front-line states, cotably Angola, persuaded SWAPO to ONDON -- No wonder the participate, these sources suggest, the dismayed South Africans seized on the UN's plan to send 7,500 troops to Namibia as a pretext for canceling the arrangement. Vorster was blamed for the embarassment. In poor health anyway, he resigned after repudiating the UN plan.

If that analysis — not shared in the British Foreign Office — is accurate, there would be little point in bolding the UN elections, since the DTA victors in the December internal voting probably would form their own Namibian govern-ment, with which SWAPO would have oothing to do.

Even if South Africa does not mean for that to happen — and British sources believe Pretoria can largely control the DTA through the South African administratorgeneral in Namibia - SWAPO may oot want to enter into elec-will have won a national canvass, however limited, and that may therefore make some claim to being the real representative of the Nami-biao people. Besides, many SWAPO leaders have long been outside the territory and might have difficulty contesting a strong-ly financed and entrenched opposion party. This time, moreover, the front-line states - even if they accept

Western arguments for the compromise — may not be able to per-suade SWAPO to accept less than everyooe thought had been achieved last summer. The prospect, therefore, is for heavy African pressures for economic sanctions against South Africa - sanctions that the West probably cannot agree to thus losing much political ground in Africa that the aborted

The Fourth Estate: Who Coined Phrase

WASHINGTON — As a card-carrying controversialist — a man convinced that testiness is next to godliness — I usually know when I am about to get into a scrap. But that was not the case on the subject of "The Fourth Estate." In a piece not long ago about the in a piece not long ago about the injustice being perpetrated on my colleague, Myron Farber, I wrote in passing that the phrase "Fourth Estate" had been coined in regard to the press by English essayist William Hazlitt, writing about my vituperative hero, pamphleteer William Cobbit.

This increased the wrath of the Cobbett.

This incurred the wrath of the quotationmongers. How dare I attribute that hallowed phrase to Hazlit! "I fear that Safire may have been dazzled by a druid on his recent tour of England." writes a oewsman to the Washington Star, pointing to a stack of the leading quotation books who attribute this phrase otherwise. I have read all those quotation books, and they are all wrong.

"What Exce?"

What Eye?'

"Bartlett's Quotations," 14th Edition, quotes English historian Thomas Carlyle as writing in 1832 about "the stupendous fourth estate, whose wide world-embracing influences what eye can take in? In 1841, Carlyle used the phrase again and gave everybody a wrong steer to conservative Edmund Burke: "Burke said there were Three Estates in Parliament; but, in the Reporter's Gallery youder, there sat a Fourth Estate more important far than they all."

In a footnote, Bartlett's seems to gently contradict Carlyle's memory, citing a comment made by Lord Macaulay in 1828: "The gal-lery in which the reporters sit has become a Fourth Estate of the Realm.

Ream.

Bergen Evans, in his "Dictionary of Quotations" — the one with the superb index — comes right out and says "Carlyle picked up the term and mis-ascribed it to Burke." The most comprehensive quotation book of all, and the one I cannot do without — Stevenson's "Home Book of Proverbs, Maxims and Famous Phrases" says of Carlyle's quote: "The attribution to Burke instead of Macaulay was probably a slip of the pen, as the phrase has not been found in Burke's pub-lished works."

Burke Buffs

Burke buffs have been combing his works for years, looking for the absent phrase that Carlyla, in his sloppioess, promised them. Results: zero. In 18th Century England, the three "estates" were the King, the Clergy, and the Commons; many citations can be found in Heavy Fielding and others using Fourth Estate to mean "the mob."

but tone to mean "the press".

And so the coinage seemed to stand, with the quotation books nervously attributing the purase to ground in Africa that the aborted Macaulay, based on a probable Namibian settlement once seemed mistake by Cartyle. Not a very sol-

Okay

Okay. Maybe Hazlitt heard housemaid mumble: "Fou Estate, the damn press." But fact remains that Hazlitt wrote down, and his is the first writ record of the use of this phrase this meaning anywhere. Or at it anywhere that anybody bas found.

Market Search

The Achilles' heel of modern cap-italism is the constant threat of a shortage of markets. Flora Lewis (IHT, Oct. 9) cites a spreading to the semideveloped world for markets to pull itself out of its chronic economic slump. An AP dispatch (IHT, Oct 10) has the Kuwaiti oil minister charging the After those claims had been staked, I started to test him with specific questions. I first asked what kind of regime Ayatollah Shariat-Maderi envisaged for Iran. He referred me back to the constitution of 1906 which provided for a monarchy with a parliament that made laws subject to review by a five-man religious council. "The council," His Holiness said, "would reject all laws which it found repugnant to Islam, or at odds with the

THE PROBLEM NEVER MORE COMPLEX.

Rain or shine, and often swimming unstream, she never deviates. She was the first to do (and still does) padded shoulders under jersey dresses, and she keeps honing up her demure, quietly elegant, pareddown look that is best translated into jersey and the softest suedes.

She has little trouble, because her look is so distinctive that once a Muir fan, always a Muir fan. Her newest shape was a dressmaker's coat, slim and narrow with skinny lapels, cutaway sides and quilted shoulder pads worn outside instead of in. Her oversized blazer, sporting a small sailor collar was new. as were her extravagant dungarees of

Her brillians suedes - purple. tarquoise, sun-yellow - were the only color in an otherwise low-key collection of navys and greys.

Most Flamboyant

John Bates is the most flamboyant of all British designers. Hisshows are the best in London.

Once again, his show was a brilliant display, his elothes a series of strong statements. Not for faint hearts are his swirling capes, gutsy black leather embroidered with brilliant colors and sexy dresses over black patterned stockings.

Zandra Rhodes, who has stayed out of the circuit for several seasons, showed again. Unfortunately, the whole thing fell flat because hers are not the kind of clothes you show at noon in a drab hall to the accompaniment of church music.

Miss Rhodes does the most exciting and extravagant fantasy clothes in the world, the kind one should wear once then burn. As a store president put it: "It's like lighting a cigar with a $1,000 bill."

Her newest look was Henry VIII, with lots of rolled pearl collars and epaulets. A lighter version included romantie kerchief dresses. dripping with pearls. An outstanding colorist, she also scored with black billowy coars outlined with

Besides those, London has a lot of young talents.

Janice Wainwright is definitely a rising star. She scored with an impeccable satin-and-lace that was nicely how-to-be-sexy-withouttrying (much). Of all the boudoir looks, hers was the best. Benny Ong is also making giant strides with a well-conceived and highly professional collection whose hallmark is quality. Adrian Cartnell's black-and-white collection was more tuned-in than the rest of London designers, but his deadpan revival of the '50s was somewhat heavy handed.

Brian Baker had fun, young elothes and a good fabric and color sense. Patricia Roberts, herself the very image of the prim Irish lass, had a sweet Irish-cottage look, complete with band-crocheted lace collar and cuffs over black dresses. Australian Jane Catlin had clean, lovely silk dresses for daytime, and frothy lace-and-taffeta spun-sugar concoctions for evening.

On the whole, despite a few efforts to the contrary, daywear was still hard to come by and evening clothes still the main attraction of London fashion week.

1864 Lafite: A Touch of Mushroom

By Susan White

MEMPHIS, Tenn.Oct. 30 (UPI)

— A hush fell over the lavishly decorated banquet room. where 30 guests in evening dress turned away from a medieval least to stare at an ordinary looking bot-tle of wine swathed in brown wrapping paper.

It was time for the decanting of the 1864 Chateau Lafite - the most expensive bottle of wine ever

Michael Broadbent, the wine director of Christie's who had flown in for the Saturday night occasion from London, carefully inserted a corkscrew into the dark brown cork. Worried that the 114-year-old wine might taste like vinegar. he was concerned as the crumbling cork came out in tiny pieces. Picking the bits away from the rim. Broadbent shoved a siphon into the bottle and inserted a tube. The wine trickled into a glass. He sniffed the Chateau Lafite several times and then raised his eyebrows and smiled.

'A Treat'

"You're in for a treat tonight." A roar of approval went up from the guests, who had paid $1,500 apiece—for one sip of wine.

The first taste of the red Bordeaux went to John Grisanu, the owner of an Italian restaurant who had bought the wine for $18,000 at an auction last May and who had arranged the dinner for the benefit of St. Jude Children's Hospital

Grisanti took his portion in an oversized wine glass he had brought for the occasion. After one sip he pronounced it "drinkable."

"It is worth every penny we paid for it." he said triumphantly.

"Considering the condition of the cork! I think the wine is truly magnificent," said Don Vargo, owner of a Michigan restaurant and the runner-up to Grisanti at the Heublein rare-wine auction.

Take-Out Portion

Kemmons Wilson, the chairman of the board of Holiday Inns Inc. (he had donated the elaborate dinner), thought so much of the wine that he took his portion home

"I share everything with my friends," said Wilson, who transferred his share into an empty vodka bottle that he stuffed into his coat pocket,

"It's a bit dreary on the nose with a just a little touch of mushrooms, and it's no longer red more like an autumn brown," Broadbent said. "But it's still healthy and is a real full wine."

DARIS — The food which above all others is probably most indispensable over the smallest area. and the one which shifts most abruptly from being an everyday staple to a luxury few can afford, is the date.

"Dates are to the people of the Sahara what wheat is to the French and rice to the Chinese," a French author has written, and their great importance in the Sahara oases is symbolized by their frequently complicated ownership.

One person may own the land on which the trees grow, another the water rights that make their cultivation possible, and a third the trees themselves. Add to this that water rights are expressed in terms of so many minutes of irrigation at fixed hours on fixed days, and that more than one person may share any given water allocation, and that the same tree may belong to several different persons who share its crop, and you have an idea of the preciousness of dates

But if their ownership is a source of riches, dates, on territory where they are the sole staple, are available to everybody (for some Saharan tribes date palms are communal property). But as you move southward into the Sahara, where oases are fewer, or westwards towards the Atlantic, where palms grow less well, the date suddenly in the space of 100 miles or so becomes a rare luxury.

The reason for this quick conversion from staple to luxury is that the tree requires quite special conditions to flourish. "Its demands for heat exceed almost any other cultivated plants," says The Practical Encyclopedia of Gurdening, a trifle ungrammatically. The ideal temperature range is between 70 and 92 degrees Farenheit during the April-September ripening season: Egypt. for instance, meets that ideal. The date tree also requires water - underfoot, not overhead. It lives, as the French saying goes, with its feet in the water and its bead in the fire."

It cannot tolerate rain during the months of ripening. Indeed, in certain areas of southern California where the conditions are otherwise right, the fruit will not mature simply because of dew in the night air. In the Sahara and the Middle East dates sometimes do ripen along watercourses or seacoasts, but they are low-yielding and of inferior quality. The conditions that suit the date palm are propitious to almost no other food plant, and that is the reason it is a staple wherever it grows best: There is no competi-

The palm family is imperfectly known, but probably numbers about 210 genera, comprising 2,000 to 3,000 species, of which only two are of great food-producing importance - the coconut and date palms. Of the latter, a single species. Phoenix dactylifera, produces almost all the dates that reach the market and most of those that are esten without the blessing of commerce as well. There are more than two hundred varieties of Phoenix ductyliferu, whose fruits are fall into three groups - dry, semi-dry and soft. Dry dates have the lowest sugar content (which may be 60 percent all the same), so these are the ones that constitute the daily food of desert populations. They can be

Two galleries have set up separately under one big, barnlike roof. To step off a busy street into a cob bled courtyard girded by stark-white farm-style buildings (doors and window frames in bright scarlet) is a surprise. The Lacbowsky is on the ground level. Blindingly white walls are an over-insistent background for Morellet's offwhite tracing-paper compositions ruled across in black crayou. The ruled across in black crayou. The single crayon strokes are prolonged beyond the borders of the paper rectangles and onto the wall itself; sometimes they swoop in deep curves, but mostly they march straight through the paper.

On the upper level, the Baronian is has whire walls and cement flooring. Paolini's art offers much the same uncompromisingly bare bones — fare possibly easiest di-gested by those with a mathematical turn of mind. A wooden frame is the departure point for what looks like a geometry lesson, with large triangles and oblongs overlapping. Less rigorous are other Paolinis: broken brick fragments scat-tered beneath white canvases cut out and hung as a triptych; a drawing of an antique statue with a sweeping outline of it superimposed over the frame; a plaster hand holding crumpled paper.

Administration's Views Opposed by Papandreou

By Victor Walker

A THENS (IHT) — The general elections in Greece last No-vember presented Premier Constantine Caramanlis with a setback and a dilemma. Although he is one of the few Western leaders able to govern without the need of a coalition or support from a minor party, he lost more in the election than his closest advisers had anticipated. More important, the liberal center saw its representation in the 300seat single-chamber Parliament cut from 60 seats to 15, while the Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK) of Andreas Papandreou boosted its seats from 13 to 93 and took over as official opposition.

For the first time, Mr. Caramanlis no longer enjoyed bi-partisan support on the great national issues, Because, he said, the issues would all reach critical points during 1978, this made it necessary for him to seek a renewal of his mandate a full year in advance of the constitutional require-

When the center under George Mayros had been the major opposi-tion, between November, 1974, and last November, Mr. Caramanlis had been able to count on over-whelming parliamentary backing for Greece's accession to the European Economic Community. He could also count on general support, with reservations on matters of detail, for his policies on the Acan and towards NATO.

Since last November this has not been the case.

Mr. Papaudreou argues that since it is the Turks who are asking from Greece what Greece already holds under international conventions, then Greece has nothing to talk about, Negotiations can only imply a readiness to surrender na-tional rights, he says, and should be broken off. If the Turks choose to appeal to the World Court, Greece can follow them there; if they do not, then mulon have — let them "come and take."

Mr. Caramanlis believes it is necessary to negotiate hilaterally with Turkey on the Aegean continental shelf dispute. And even in the face of Turkish abstention, he wants to pursue Greece's recourse to the In-ternational Court at The Hague, A series of Greek-Turkish meetings on various levels, including be-tween premiers, has already been held. More are set for the end of this year and in early 1979.

The Greek-Turkish dispute is formally over demarcation of the Aegean continental shelf and air-space control, But behind this dis-pute the Greeks identify a mood of expansionism in Ankara. For this reason they have armed themselves against Turkish attack. And quoting the supreme right of defense of national territory, they have also fortified the East Aegean islands off the coast of Turkey, in technical breach of treaty provisions. This is about the only aspect of govern-ment policy on the Aegean that has PASOK support.

Mr. Caramanlis has made Greece's accession to the EEC his culminating political ambition. Membership, he says, is not only essential for economic reasons but is also a safeguard for Greece's democratic regime.

Mr. Caramanlis, proclaiming that Greece belongs to the West. would like to see this country all the way back in the NATO alliance, from which it withdrew in 1974 in the aftermath of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus. But such a return would be contingent on the elimination of the cause for withdrawal - the Turkish occupation of the northern part of the island. In the meantime he is seeking a "special relationship" or "interim arrangement" with the alliance.

Perilous Step

Mr. Papandreou wants Greece to pult out of NATO altogether and follow a non-aligned policy. To the argument that this would be a perilous step for a small country in so sensitive a geographical region, Mr. Papandreou responds that a na-tional nuclear arsenal would be a surer guarantee than a NATO

On the other hand, there are many in Greece who think that the only serious foreign policy blunder committed by the Caramanlis gov-ernment has been the withdrawal from NATO, even if it was a limited withdrawal. They feel that aside from the strictly military consequences, it put Greece in the posi-tion of seeming "less loyal" than Turkey to the West, However, during his visit to the United States last May Mr. Caramanlis put the withdrawal on a rather different footing than previously when he described it as having been, in the heat of the 1974 events, the only alternative to a declaration of war on Turkey - or the selection of the lesser of two evils.

Mr. Caramantis and Mr. Papandreou are also in disagreement on whether it is desirable to seek full restoration of the old close links between Greece and the United States, which were strained by the seven-year dictatorship of the colo-nels and stretched still more tenuously by the Turkish invasion of Cyprus.

When the U.S. Congress voted this summer to repeal the embargo on the supply of arms to Turkey, the Greek government was relatively muted in its expression of regret. The fire-breathing came from PASOK.

The arms embargo was originally imposed because of the use in the Cyprus invasion of U.S. weapons shipped to Turkey for NATO purposes. The embargo was maintained because of Turkey's continued refusal to respect United Nations decisions and resolutions on

In Athens, Politicians Disagree Over EEC Terms.

A THENS (IHT) — At this stage, even those in Greece who are against this country's full membership in the European Economic Community bave accepted the fact that Greece will become the tenth member of the EEC sometime in

The controversy now centers on two basic issues: The first involves the actual terms of the final agreement and the repercussions these will have on the economy and the social structure of the country. The second is whether or not there will be a referendum on the membership issue. The center and the left-of-center parties have complained about the government's approach to the EEC. But observers have noted that a realistic and precise evaluation of what full membership will mean has been lacking on both sides. Now, with the negotiations progessing according to a fixed timeta-ble, the details are gradually being filled in and specific sectors are being analyzed.

Nonetheless, the debate is sharp-The government under Premier

Constantine Caramanlis tends to hold its cards close to the chest so as not to provide Andreas Papan-dreou's PASOK (Panhellenic Socialist Movement) with ammunition in its continuing rearguard battle against membership. For the administration does not wish to alarm the Greek working popula-tion by bluntly pimpointing the changes that still have to be made to bring the economy into line with those of Greece's European partners. To do so in a period of deep concern over the performance of Western economies in general could have unfavorable political

BRUSSELS (IHT) — Neither the Greek negotiators nor their counterparts in the European Economic Community seem in doubt which Greece becomes the tenth Common Market member will be settled by Christmas. Although there are still difficult negotiations to come - in particular those concerning agriculture and regional aid — the mood bere is optimistic, and the feeling is that the talks are bound to succeed.

Questions concerning capital movements, the customs union and Euratom (European Atomic Energy Community) were settled during the summer months. Agreements on these issues set a cordial tone that both sides believe will persist even though some of the most difficult problems have still to be

However, the question of most interest to the Greeks — the date when Greece will formally enter the EEC - has not yet been decided. Premier Constantine Caramanlis is naturally anxious that entry should take place as soon as possible.

EEC officials believe that Mr. Caramanlis is too sanguine in his hope that January, 1980, can be the probably win hands down, it wants target date. Out of consideration the required changes. for the Greeks, they do not like to voice these doubts. But by any assessment it seems unlikely that Greek membership can be ratified should have seven or even ten years to bring itself into line with community regulations.

Once formal entry has been completed, another question in the ne-gotiations is the length of the transitional period after formal entry during which Greece will align itself with the EEC rules and standards. The transitional period cannot be shorter than the five years that Britain was given, and the dehaic centers on whether Greece

Commission experts argue that if the transition period is too long, it would not put sufficient pressure on Greece to bring about the neces-sary reforms. On the other hand, if it is too short, it would not give the Greeks enough time to make the required changes.

This problem is not as simple as it might appear. Tied up with it are French and Italian anxieties about the effect of Greek membership on their own agricultural interests. Also, the West Germans would like to prevent Greek nationals from enjoying free movement of labor within the community for at least a decade. With unemployment in the Common Market currently at more than 6 million, and with no prospect that this figure will soon come down, the Germans fear that the mission officials are anxious too.

community is ill-equipped to cope with a potential flood of Greek migrant workers.
Some EEC officials believe that the German argument is exaggerated. But as an issue it touches a sensitive nerve in the Greeks. Athens is constantly on the alert for any attempt by EEC members to thrust a second-class role on the Greeks. The Caramanlis administration is seen here as determined to acquire all the rights as well as assume all the responsibilities that Common Market membership will bring.

Tough Debate

There is no doubt that the debate on this issue will be tough - as will discussion about how much and over what period Greece should benefit from the EEC's social and regional development funds, Com-

French will succeed in their attempts. But it is obvious that they are worried that the Greek maritime industry could pose strong competition for their own shipping

In conjunction with the Greek entry negotiations, the Commission is seeking ways to strengthen EEC institutions and procedures so that Greece can be absorbed with a minimum of difficulty. The process is behind schedule.

Commission officials point out that the shoring up of their own structure is just as important as a satisfactory outcome to the negotiations with Athens. With the entry of the Greeks and of other nations into the EEC, it is necessary that the community safeguard its insti-tutions if is not to become little more than a free trade area. This is a potential danger that lurks behind the easygoing diplomacy be-tween the EEC and the Greeks. Moreover, both sides know it.

the U.S. government as morally obligated to work harder for a settlement in Cyprus as well as to ensure that the balance of power between Greece and Turkey is not disturbed, PASOK, however, sees this as opening the way to U.S. intervention at the expense of Greece.

With the exception of the economy, foreign policy is the principal political issue in Greece.

This, and the fact that a moderate conservative government finds itself confronting a Socialist oppo-sition, is the essential difference between the Greek political situation and the normal European experience. It is also the real meaning of the polarization in Greece since last November, which many Greeks find especially disturbing.

An Assertion

It is easy to overlook the fact that while PASOK last November increased its parliamentary repre-sentation from 13 to 93 seats, it was largely a result of the electoral system: Its popular support actually rose by only 11.76 percent, to 25.34 percent. The governing New De-mocracy Party and the center logether, despite the center's shipwreck, secured almost 54 percent of the votes.

Many Greeks believe that Mr. Papandreou, in putting forward policies that are much more extreme than any supported in the past by a main opposition party, is spurring a horse that can never out-last the combined right and center in a general election race.

This belief is based on the absence of a real working class in Greece — more than half the economically active population is estimated to consist of people working for themselves or relatives, on the land, in small businesses and industries or in the service sector. The assertion is also based on the idea that any further significant increase in Mr. Papandreou's strength at the polls, provided there is no national or economic disaster, can come only at the expense of the steady 10-to-12 percent support received by the Communist Party.

The question is whether the Greek center . . . is condemned to remain no more than a fringe party without a popular base, or whether it can be resuscitated.

On the assumption that the right can bridge its own ground with the center without fracturing under the strain, this argument continues, the most that could happen in normal circumstances would be that Mr. Papandreou might find himself in a position to form a coalition govern-ment with the Communists or a minority government kept in power by the Communists. But he might not find this a tenable situation in a country where the wounds of civil war have not completely healed.

Under the constitution, the argument that the mass of center voters will not and cannot desert moderate conservatism for socialism need not be put to the test until late in 1981. But there is a strong current of belief, also held by many govern-ment supporters, that the Greeks may in fact be called to the polls

Several factors are quoted in support of this belief.

It is said that Mr. Caramanlis, who will be 72 next year, would like to lead his party through one more general election and then stand as its candidate for president of the republic when Constantine Tsatsos' term as president expires in 1980. Presidents are elected by Parlia-

This is not a matter only of per-sonal ambition. The constitution gives the president of the republic considerable powers that Mr. Tsatsos has not so far needed to

The Presidency

From the presidency, Mr. Caramanlis could hope to guide his own New Democracy Party through the possibly difficult days following his retirement from its leadership. He would also be in a constitutional position to force one more general election, even with his own future at stake, rather than sign legislation that he considered disastrous. He could, in effect, give

A general election next year would presumably follow signature of a treaty of accession with the EEC and probably its ratification by the Greek Parliament if Mr. Caramanlis could muster the threefifths majority needed for such legislation. Although it would not be a referendum on the EEC, which the government insists is not needed and the EEC agrees is not a requirement, membership would inevitably be a key issue.

Weakness

Another relevant problem is the continuing basic weakness of the Greek political system; the absence of lasting parties of principle on Western European models. No ooe can hazard more than a guess on who would succeed Mr. Caramanlis as party leader and premier if death ur disability removed him from the scene, nor on whether a new leader could succeed in holding the party

It is not even certain how the new leader would be selected. Presumably the party deputies would meet and vote. But Mr. Caramanis himself did not rise to the leadership by that route in 1955 when he formed his first government: He was picked by the head of state and subsequently endorsed by the deputies of the party in power. He then formed a new party, as he did again on his return to Greece in 1974 after I f years of self-exile in Paris.

No Involvement

Traditionally, parties in Greece do not survive the death or retirement of their leaders. There is no real involvement of the electorate in the party system, and no custom of annual party conferences at which policies can be debated and directions determined.

This applies equally to PASOK. The only party predating the seven-year dictatorship of the colonels is the KKE which in any case was outlawed until 1974.

Many thoughtful Greeks, including publisher Helen Vlachou in articles in her newspaper Kathimerini, have publicly or privately regreted that grass-roots parties of principle have not been set up in the four years since the collapse of the junta.

Mr. Caramanlis knows that not only the unity but even the survival considerably more than the target of 16 percent.

The main reason for this, according to Xenophon Zolotas, governor of the Bank of Greece, is "pressure from the banks that are always pushing to expand credit." The rate of increase of bank credit to the private sector last year hit 25.5 percent, the highest in the last 25

State Control

Mr. Zolotas said that the fault lies particularly with the National Bank of Greece, the country's largest commercial bank, which accounts for between one-half and two-thirds of all loans in the commercial banking sector. "We have tried to restrict their expansionary policies," Mr. Zoloras said, "and we hope that in the future they will the growth in money supply under stricter control. This year, growth is the currency committee,"

The National Bank of Greece is indirectly controlled by the state, as are the other six Greek commercial banks. The major shareholders are pensions funds that are represented shareholders' meetings by the finance minister. There are similar arrangements for other commercial banks, with the result that the state controls more than 80 percent of commercial banking activity.

Private banks account for only 6 percent of the sector. Foreign banks, mainly Citibank and Bank of America, also have a comparatively small share of the market.

The state's activities in banking and particularly in industrial credit extend further by encouraging the activities of such banks as the National investment Bank for Indus-trial Development (ETEVA), the Hellenic Industrial and Mining Investment Co. (ELEVME) and the Hellenic Industrial Development Bank (ETVA). A number of important high-technology industrial stantine Mitsotakis says the negotiations are progressing rapidly and that he is "very happy" with the present attitude of the EEC. As he sees it, the job is now to get on as quickly as possible and keep transition périods down to a minimum. The Greeks are pleased that the earlier linkage of Greek candidacy for EEC membership with the other Southern European applicants - Spain and Portugal - has apparently been abandoned. As recently as the end of April, however. the Commission was still lumping the three candidacies together when considering the general problems of enlarging the Nine.

There is no doubt that Greece's long-standing association agree-ment with the EEC and the changes that it has brought about, even if limited in scope, set Greece apart.

ETBA'S ACRIEVEMENTS AND TARGETS FROM THE REPORT OF Mr GEORGE N. SPENTSAS

ETBA'S GOVERNOR AT THE BANK'S GENERAL MEETING ON JUNE 29, 1978 In 1977 ETBA recorded an impressive financing activity. Loan approvals amounted to Drs. 4.810 million in 1976 which means an increase rate of 34%. A much more substantial increase rate (44%) was observed in the amount of loans granted i.e. Drs 2,559 million as against Drs. 1,780 million in 1976. The fact that the rate of loan approvals during the first five months of 1976 (Drs. 2,800 million) has been more than double the rate of the previous year ensures good prosperts of improvement in the country's investment climate. In the past year ETBA applied programs for the establishment of various industries such as asbestos fibres. ammonia, electrical telecommunication equipment, pharmaceutical raw materials and erms for the country's armed forces. These development projects amounting to Drs. 8,000 million will be carried out, on ETBA'S initiativa within the next two years.

 In the intrastructure sector, ETBA's afforts in 1977 were concentrated on an endeavour to speed up the project of industrial areas which under the new Law 742/77 were increased from 9 to 28. Intensive development was also Heraldion and Patras, in land acquisition procedures concerning the industrial areas of Kornotini, Kavala, Prevaza and Larissa and in the establishment of industrial areas at loanning, Chania and Tripolis. Although during the past 10 years expenses incurred by the Bank for these industrial areas were in the region of Drs. 100 million per year, in 1977, they rose by 400% reaching the amount of Drs. 500 mill The 1978 plan provides for lunds in the region of Drs 900 million to be appropriated in this sector.

 Raising funds from sources abroad under very favourable ms without state or other security, can be taken as a proof of loreign Banks, confidence in the Greek ecomomy and of the high reputation that ETBA enjoys among the world trade

 A special unit for the service of Greek and foreign invistors has been set up at ETBA's Development Division (E. Venizelou 13, 7th floor). Its task is not only to advise prospective clients on the existing legal provisions, incentiv and procedures but also to assist them in all their contacts with public agencies and banking institutions until their in-

Accordingly, economic growth with a current external deficit on an acceptable size will depend more on the expansion and diversification of industrial production and exports. Policy in June and the other at the Thessaloniki International Trade Fair last month, Premier Constantine Caramanlis served warming that the government's four-year-old policy of redistribution of the national income to lower-paid groups would have to take second place to an assault on Greece's persistent double-digit inflation.

The policy of "correcting the injustices done to the working people" under the seven-year dictatorship of the colonels, which col-lapsed in 1974, "may be said to have achieved its purpose," Mr. Caramanlis told the Social and Economic Policy Council, a group of business, industry, union and government representatives.

At the Thessaloniki Fair the premier told how the cake had been redivided since 1974: Minimum salaries and wages had gone up 97 percent for men and 127 percent for women, he said, while in industry the hourly wage was expected to show a 132-percent increase for the four years. Allowing for inflation, real wages had gone up 43 percent against an average of 8 percent for countries in the European Economic Community.

In agriculture, he said, the policy of "shifting income from the cities to the farms" had seen 127 billion drachmas ($3.42 billion) devoted to subsidies and other supports in the same four years, "paid for by the tax-paying community as a whole."
This situation, Mr. Caramanlis

One wage increase figure sug-gested by industrialists for 1979 is 6 percent. Even for openers, this is seen as improbably low. Trained Employees

The emphasis on steady yearround tourist traffic, however, highlights the need for more trained employees in the sector. Nearly two out of every three persons working in the tourist industry have no training. Most work part-time during the summer season. Industry experts say that greater stress should be placed on increas-ing the capacity of hotel and catering schools and encouraging fulltime, year-round employment.

For years, the concentration of visitors has been in the months of July and August. Despite the hectic building program, accommodations and other tourist facilities are stretched beyond normal capacity during these months. For, however much emphasis is officially put on the variety of natural and historical sites, the majority of the visitors are attracted more by the sun, the sea and relatively inexpensive living.

Women Are Catching Up In Jobs, Social Areas

A THENS (IHT) — Greek women have made considerable prog-ress in employment opportunities and in social areas in recent years, including during the period of the military dictatorship. But discrimination against women continues in some laws, and the archaic dowry system is still used to "buy" a husband for many women. There is also concern in some circles that this country! very conservative society should not be changed too quickly.

The minimum wage has increased 97 percent for men and 127 percent for women since Premier Constantine Caramanlis took over in 1974. This year, minimum wages are to be raised by 22 percent for men and 25 percent for wome

While these statistics have not been challenged, the opposition has pointed out that proportionally far more of Greece's one million working women are earning minimum wages. Virginia Tsouderou, one of the ten women in Parliament, said that 61 percent of women account for the lower industrial wage earners. She added that despite moves to even the score, the average income for men is still nearly double that for women. Comparatively very few women occupy higher posts either in the civil service or in private

A key element in the slow progress towards equality is the first official recognition that Greek men and women have equal rights and equal obligations. This appears in the post-junta constitution, but discrimination remains in the civil and commercial codes. So Greek women are still subject to their busbands with respect to their household duties, raising children and going to work or conducting business.

The Church

Some people, including government officials, argue that it is unreasonable in a conservative society to want to move too fast. They stress that the whole fabric of the society is built around the Greek Orthodox Church concepts of the family.

In effect, one of the major stumbling blocks to further progress is the latent opposition of the church and the political threat that this carries for the government. While not opposed to Greek membership in the European Eco nomic Community, the Orthodox Church sees a potential danger in foreign concepts of social structure and behavior, such as the new divorce laws in Italy. (The Greek church is fighting a stubborn battle against divorce reform.)

Agriculture Groundwork Laid for EEC Entry

A THENS (IHT) — "Member-ship in the European Eco-nomic Community will cartainly be a shock for Greek agriculture," said the oew Minister of Coordination. Constantine Mitsotaks. But, he added, once entry is completed. Greek farmers will enjoy "enlarged

The official view in Athens is that after an intersive round of technical meetings is wound up by the end of the year the way will be open for some of the outstanding issues to be resolved.

However, ministerial technocrats in Athens tend to understate both the potential burden of Greek agriculture on the community and the difficulties in tringing about rapid change in the conservative EEC.

One of the first problems being eccountered if the validity of statistics being used to assess the current status of Geek agriculture. Most of the basic statistics from the 1971 census, takin during the regime of the colonel, are considered inaccurate. Yet we initial positions in the rate, 1-et he initial positions in the membership bargaining have been based on hese figures. Greekexperts, for example, say that instead of some 41 percent of the country's labor force being in agriculture, the figure is closer to 24 percent or less. This figure nearly double the calculated output per agricultural worker which, according to the latest Agricultural Bank estimate, would be around $2,700 for 1/75, bringing it much closer to the EEC's $3,750 (at 1970 prices andexchange rates).

A Difference

The government claims that Creek membership would increase the number of EEC farm units by only 15 percent instead of the 19 bercent calculated by the communi-ty, while the active EEC farming population would grow by less than percent instead of 12 percent.

Greece's position is that al-though everyone recognizes that its number of reasons. First is that the agriculture has a long way to go, the situation is not nearly as bad as t has been made out to be.

as one major bank observes, there remains a significant difference. In industry, forces for change are working from within and adaptation to EEC membership will not depend entirely on government policy: in agriculture, it is up to the state to make all the decisive

In real terms the problems facing moves. While observers outside the Greek agriculture are much the government say the Greek minissame as those facing industry. But ing Greek agriculture into the present-day European context because they lack appropriate skills in planning and execution, too level changes effected earlier this year are likely to breathe a new and energetic spirit into the machinery.

Arguments

While one of the arguments over Greek membership in the EEC is that the low productivity of its agri-culture would place an excessive burden on the community's common agricultural policy fuods, another is that Greek farmers, attracted by higher community prices, will be able to significantly increase their supply of produce, thus creat-ing competition with some of the members of the community. Ironically, this year saw a dramatic revival in agriculture production, parocularly in cereals. According to the latest Ministry of Agriculture statistics, wheat production is up 53.3 percent this year and barley up by 36.6 percent. The community is more than self-sufficient in both grains, and the low average 1974-76 production in Greece more than met its own domestic needs.

There are also considerable gains in other produce, with an average increase in value (at constant 1975 prices) of more than 12 percent. (Increases in livestock and dairy products - both imported in large quantities by Greece from the community — were insignificant.)

The Greeks contend, bowever, that their small volume of output in comparison with the EECs is a guarantee that under full accession the supply of Greek products would not exceed the absorptive capacity of the market. Small volume is also used to support the argument that for those products pro-duced by Greece in which the community is not sufficient. Greek exports to the community would not significantly alter its relationship with other suppliers.

They also point out that in 1976 only 16 percent of the community's agricultural price support budget was spent for products that Greece also produces and that might create surpluses: wine, fruit, vegetables, tobacco and olive oil.

Shipping Facing Critical Period

ATHENS (IHT) — For many years the Greek merchant fleet has been the most dynamic and successful sector of the Greek economy. The 35 million gross tons now registered under the Greek flag make it the third largest fleet in world, with more than 4,000 vessels. locluding the 883 Greek-owned merchant vessels flying under flags of convenience, it is the largest national fleet in the world, accounting for 12.5 percent of total toonage.

This, the Greeks feel, is some-thing to be reckoned with even though shipping, like aviation, does oot technically figure in the negotiations for entry into the European Economic Community.

The present period is critical not only because of the deep crisis in shipping due to the shump in world trade but also because moves are afoot within the EEC to develop a common shipping policy despite the sharply conflicting interests of member countries. The Greeks feel very strongly that they want to be included. George Dalacouras. a member of the Greek Parliament, recently told an international meeting, "It would be convenient, necessary, logical, fair and also profita-ble" for a common EEC shipping policy to emerge only after Greece ecomes a full member.

laid up as of March 31. And opportunities are dwindling because Greek cargo ships operate almost exclusively as tramps in cross trade (i.e., carrying other people's goods to third countries).

When the going gets tough, cross trade is likely to suffer most since both exporting and importing countries will favor their own oational shipping even if costs are higher. The UN Conference on Trade and Development's proposed liner sharing code, which would give 40 percent of the car-goes to each nation at the ends of the route and 20 percent to cross traders, does not belp. For the Greeks, there is also no assistance from the increasing restrictions imposed by trading countries on the age of vessels involved nor the London underwriters' decision to im-sels more than 15 years old.

Because of the continuing tendency of Greek shipowners to pur-chase secondhand, the average age of the Greek fleet has moved up to nearly 12 years, while that for Greek-controlled ships under other flags is oearly 10 years.

This somber picture is further compounded by the fact that numerous Greek shipowners who did order new vessels in more favorable times are now paying for them largely in revalued yen while their income is almost exclusively in devalued dollars.

Unclear

Greek shipowners are not all that clear at this time on what they stand to gain or how the EEC may benefit from Greek membership. Their thoughts are more in tune with those of the British and the Danes in the bid to ensure a continuing degree of free trading within the enlarged EEC. In this, they are at odds with the French and the Germans, who are much more liver conference oriented.

But the Greeks feel that whatever may emerge, their willingness to throw the weight of their over-sized fleet behind equitable deci-sions jointly arrived at can do nothing but good. They particularly dislike the Soviet bloc freight-cutting tactics and, as Mr. Dalacouras put it, the "discrimination and protectionist shipping policies of developing countries.

The president of the Union of Greek Shipping Owners, Anthony Chandris is prominently behind the recent creation of the International Association of Dry Cargo Shipowners. This group may turn out to be a potent lobby for inde-

Education: The Problem of the Long Nail

classrooms, of teachers and equipment. Despite austerity in other sectors, funds are being made available for the most concentrated construction program ever attempted here and for the appointment of sufficient teachers not only to staff the new schools but also to reduce the size of classes to more acceptable levels. Antiquated curricula are being overhauled, and educa-tional television has been iotro-

The government describes the modernization of education as second in importance only to national defense. It wants to narrow the traditional differences in standards between the cities and the rest of the country and in the educational opportunities available to the children of the well-to-do and those of ordinary means.

Says Education Ministry Uoder-secretary Vassilios Kontoyano-poulos: "It is oot altogether unjust to describe education in Greece as an urgent problem hanging fire for 15 decades" (in other words, as long as modern Greece has exist-

All this is easily uoderstandable for a country that has developed as recently and as rapidly as Greece. What may seem more uousual with full membership in the European Economic Community expected by 1980, is that it should first have been occessary to tackle "the prob-lem of the long oail" and the do-mestic language barrier.

The Long Nail

The young man in his twenties or thirties, oursing a two-centimeter nail on the little finger of his left hand, is oot seeo so ofteo now as a few years ago.

The nail was the young man's way of telling the world he had escaped manual labor on the land or in industry and had joined the fortunate few who worked with their brains - or wits. Otherwise, of course, the oail would have broken.

The mentality that led him to grow the long oail still survives. This is apparent whenever a bank or a public utility announces open-ings for new graduates and hun-dreds turn up for a handful of posi-

Going far deeper than snobbery, the custom of the nail was based on the widespread feeling, not substantially shaken even today, that real security is provided only by a

> This no longer applies to the same extent. Even farm workers now have pensions. But it is proving a hard task to persuade the young man knocking on the doors of the higher educational institutes to adapt his outlook to the changing needs of the country for techni-cal education and vocational training.

In a homogeneous society without national minorities, the lan-guage problem is a matter of which Greek to read, write and speak. The government, with a boldoess unlikely to be appreciated outside this country, has decreed that demouki, the spoken language of the people, should replace the more formal katharevousa throughout the educa-tional system and the civil service.

Language Barrier

The ultimate aim is to eliminate social distinctions deriving from what really was a language barrier as well as to raise the general cul-tural level. The child who never went to a university learned a language in school that he would not use outside school and, in extreme cases, barely understood. At the very least, he was unlikely to ac-quire a reading habit. The switch to demotiki has meant a massive task of translating and reprioting textbooks.

Mr. Kootoyanopoulos recently told a conference of school inspectors that curricula modernization had involved new or translated textbooks in all six primary school grades, and in secondary education 42 new textbooks and 44 old ooes were translated into demotiki.

"One of the greatest achievements, which surpasses the purely educational sector and constitutes an event of genuinely supreme na-tional importance, is the solution of the language problem," he said.
The establishment of demotiki at all levels of education . . . puts an end to a situation that had held hack the social, educational and cultural course of our people."

Progress

Changing statistics illustrate the attention devoted to education and the progress made:

• In this year's budget, 23 perceot of total expenditure was ear-marked for national defense and 13 percent (31.4 billion drachma, or $848 million) for education.

 The rate of completion of oew classrooms has risen from 630 io 1974 to 2,000 in 1977 and is expect-ed to reach 3,000 annually from

The number of teachers is up from 3.156 in 1974 to 5.176 in kin-dergarten, from 27,818 to 31.874 in primary schools from 17.392 to 22,916 in secondary general educa-tion and from 570 to 3,027 in secordary technical education.

Greek students in the 1960s, the Education Ministry notes, bad two university-level campuses, while to-day there are 11. Of 13 higher educational institutes, five are full universities: Atheos. Thessalooiki, Patrai, foanning and Thrace. A University of Crete is being set up. and a University of the Aegean, hased oo Rhodes hut with faculties on other Dodecanese and East Aegean islands, is to the planning

There are now 576 state technical and vocational training schools of various levels, 148 of them in Athens, 143 in Macedonia and the rest spread through the country.

Final Step

Public educational projects listed for completion in the early 1980s, a number of them with partial World Bank financing, include five higher technical education centers, 12 agricultural training centers, three higher education centers. five vocational training schools and three tourist personnel training schools, A $125 million project (with $60 million from the World Bank) will said, as extending from six to nine equip science and prevocational facilities at 40 existing high schools and construct, equip and furnish 10 combined vocational and technical education centers and four higher technical and vocational education

A law passed by Parliament during the summer extends the reform to the higher educational institutes, in what Mr. Kontoyanopoulos describes as the final step in the initial program.

The students protested strongly that the educational reform undermined their "acquired rights" and that they were given too little say in university affairs. But any public sympathy they might have gained was lessened by revelations that success rates in examinations often were as low as 15 to 20 percent. The general tendency is to connect this with the mushrooming of political movements in the universities sioce the collapse of the dietator-ship. From now on, students will either pass tests regularly or make way for others. With an average of just less than 80,000 candidates a year taking en-try examinations for some 14,000 places, there is little disagreement outside the student body that it is time to toughen up. The studeots themselves maintain there would be fewer "lifetime students," as the Greeks call those who are willing and apparently able to go on indefinitely at an university, if there were a better system of state grants and less need for them to work their way through the university.

Eventually, it is hoped, the high-er educational institutes in Greece will be so developed and organized that it will no longer be necessary for thousands of young Greeks to go abroad to study, at the cost of foreign exchange reserves and with the danger that the best of them may never come back.

No one, least of all the Education Ministry, is satisfied yet with the system. There are too many tumbledown schools and overlarge classes and, at the highest levels, a real question whether the degrees obtainable to Greece are of equal standard and value with those secured by Greeks who go abroad to study. But the mioistry points out it has had only four years to work on improving the system.

Says Mr. Kontovanopoulos: "Everything we are doing has some relation, of course, to our EEC admissioo. But it was all very necessary in any case."

Little Headway on EMS

While participants would not discuss the results of today's meeting, other sources reported that West German Bundesbank president Otmar Emminger remained opposed to any mechanism that provides protective intervention prior to any EMS currency reaching mandatory intervention points

Both Mr. Healy and Mr. Callaghan reiterated their conditions for British entry into the system that the system must favor growth in the world economy; that there must be a symmetry of obligation for both strong and weak currencies; that the scheme must be dura-ble and flexible to allow for adjustments; that it not damage the dollar and the international monetary system and that there must be a progressive shift in resources from the strong countries to the weaker countries thus involving a consideration of the EEC budget and its agricultural policy.

The dollar shed 2.90 centimes to 1.4755 Swiss franc - still above a record 1.4575 francs set Sept. 26 before the Swiss took measures to curb the appreciation of the franc. Falling to a three-and-a-half-year low, the dollar slipped below the 4.00-French-franc barrier to 3.9950 francs, down 6.95 centimes from Friday.

Reaching a new low against the yen, the dollar dropped 1.80 yen to 177.10 yen. The previous low was 178.80 yen recorded last Thursday. The dollar also scored new lows at 1.8660 guilders versus 1.9150 and 27.10 Belgian francs against 27.69 francs. Sterling surpassed $2.10 for a time today, before retreating slightly to $2.0975, for a gain of 3.5 cents on the day.

For the eight consecutive time, the London gold fixing set records, climbing near the psychological $250 level. It was fixed at $241.30 in the morning and $242.75 in the afternoon, up sharply from Friday afternoon's $234.50 an ounce. Bul-lion finished at $245.25, up $9 from showing considerable strength. On a year-to-year basis, according to a Wall Street Journal survey of 548 major companies, third- quarter after-tax profits showed a rise of almost 21 percent, compared with a 10-percent gain recorded in a similar survey of the second quarter.

Airlines and steel posted especially large advances. Autos were mixed, but the biggest producer, General Motors, Friday reported a gain of 31 percent. It was the company's most profitable third quarter yet.

Profit margins had improved in the second quarter as the economy rebounded from the severe winter and the coal strike. Another factor making for a strong year-to-year gain: the overall result for the third quarter of 1977 had been distorted by the huge $477-million loss recorded by Bethlehem Steel. (This time. Bethelhem reported a $64.7million profit.)

Steel Profits Soar

This year's third quarter was the 12th straight in which a year-to-year gain in profits had been post-ed. But on a quarter-to-quarter basis, progress has been uneven. Many economists believe that the third-quarter figure officially calculated later by the U.S. Commerce Department is likely to show little if any gain from the strong second quarter.

In the steel industry, profits soared above the depressed levels of a year ago, tripling at National Steel and Republic and doubling at Inland. The pattern seems likely to continue through year's end.

Oil companies reported strong carnings, and analysts believe that many will report improved results for the fourth quarter and the full year as well. Bank holding companies registered strong earnings gains thanks to growing loan demand and a reduction in provisions for possible loan losses. Higher prices and strong demand raised aluminum profits and building supplies had a banner third quarter, tied to the current boom in both residential and commercial con-

ITT Loses Bid To Withhold

Names of Bribed

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30 (Reuters) - The Supreme Court today rejected a request by International Telephone & Telegraph that Exchange Commission from identifying foreign officials who took bribes from the company from 1970 to 1975. ITT has acknowledged making nearly $9 million in such payments but has not named names, contending it is not order any obligation to do so. The SEC's position has been that U.S. securities laws require that dis-closure. What the regulatory agenwants to do, and should soon be able to do as a result of today's high court action, is make public the complaint it filed to starf a suit against ITT last spring.

The stated aim of the suit was to compel the company to expose the payoff recipients. ITT has charged, however, that the SEC was not con-tent to wait until the matter can be tried. Instead, according to the company, the complaint the SEC filed was itself a catalogue of who took bribes. "The commission never had to include the offensive allegations in its complaint in the first place," ITT said in its Supreme Court petition, "for they are not necessary to a statement of its cause of action."

NEW YORK, Oct. 30 (Reuters) and soybeans substantially higher at the close today on the Board of glamours cushioned a steep slide on the New York Stock Exchange today as prices ended mixed in the third heaviest trading day on record.

Analysts said investors were dis-couraged by the dollar's losses. They also noted that a major factor in the downward spiral of secondary issues on heavy volume has been margin calls.

2 Top Carter Aides See Victory Against Inflation

DJ) — Two top Carter aides voiced seeming optimism on the nation's ability to combat inflation, although they conceded it will take quite a while.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal expressed confidence over the weekend that the dollar's decline eventually will abate and Barry Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stabili-ty, warned today that economic growth will slow as part of the government's war on inflation.

"Fundamental" elements in the economy, plus the anti-inflation

U.S. Key Index Advances 0.9%

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30 (AP-DJ) — The U.S. index of leading economie indicators rose 0.9 percent in September, following a revised 0.7-percent increase in Augusi, a 0.9-percent decline in July and a 0.5-percent rise in June.

The September rise — the biggest since the 1.1-percent jump in April - brought the index to 138.3 percent of the 1967 average, compared to 137 percent in August.

Of the 10 indicators available for the index in September, five cootributed to the increase, four declined and one was unchanged. Those rising were the layoff rate. the number of husinesses reporting slower deliveries, the money sup-ply, the change in total liquid assets and huilding permits. The declining indicators were the change in sensitive prices, cootracts and orders for plants and equipment, stock prices and new orders. The average work

money markets "will reflect that in coming weeks and months."

Speaking on a national television program, he conceded that the voluntary wage-price plan will take time to show an effect on the currency markets and to get inflation down to reasonable levels.

Asserting that he did not think the currency and stock markets understood the Carter anti-inflation program, be said he expects as the markets come to understand the measures in the coming weeks and months they will exhibit more confidence in the U.S. economie posi-

He said Mr. Carter's advisers have not given him recommenda-tions on what should be in the package of anti-inflation legislation which the president has promised for January. "We need to look at the Social Security situation and at those taxes and at the whole problem in its totality," he said, adding "it is possible there will be something in that area, but that's oot certain at this time."

Meanwhile, Mr. Bosworth, speaking to a group of trucking executives in New York, predicted "we are going to have a pause in this economie expansion." He added that economic expansion at rates achieved during the past few years "cannot be expected to continue.

"It will take us about four years to get the inflation rate down," he predicted. He also said the government will oot be able to lower unemployment sharply because of the coming economie slowdown. He acknowledged that a major test of President Carter's program will come late this year when the Teamsters union begins contract talks with major trucking companies,

When you consider that more than half of the biggest U.S. industrials do business with Marine Midland, you get a good picture of how big we are. In fact, our deposits total $9.9 billion, with $2.3 billion in personal savings. We've got $641 million in capital and reserves, and assets totaling $12.1 billion.

As much as these numbers tell you, they don't say we've been a major money center bank for many years. Which means we've got enough experience in foreign exchange and foreign currency management to generate major money transactions. To provide direct loans. And manage major international credits. We can also assist in generating funds in other capital markets, through our associates.

Of course, Marine Midland has the facilities to carry this out. With our base of international operations in New York City's financial district, we have 300 branches throughout the state, and key people in 22 of the world's major financial centers.

Some people may not expect all this from us. But after all, Marine Midland is the 13th largest bank in the United States.

DAULI Murray's marvelous and I moving family memoir.

"Proud Shoes." sank with scarcely a trace in 1956. Family roots and black family life in particular did not then excite much public interest. I hope this new pictorial edition will not be swamped in the aftermath of "Roots," It is a very different story, essentially the story of Murray's grandparents, Robert and Cornelia Fitzgerald, and their de-scendants, although some of their ancestors are traced as well.

Murray — one of the first women to be ordained an Episcopal priest and a poet, feminist, teacher, attorney, civil-rights activist — intended the memoir for her small nieces and nephews and was drawn deeper as she found that the stories of these independent and brave people, some slave and some free, deserved a more complete treatment. She took four years out of her practice of law to write about the Fitzgeralds of Delaware and Pennsylvania — free people of col-or, many of whom could have crossed the color line but committed themselves to the cause and identity of blacks — and to record the history of her grandmother's people, the Smiths of Chapel Hill, white slave-owners.

Her grandmother's father, Sidney, had raped her slave mother. Sidney's sister, Mary Ruffin Smith, had never questioned slavery but she could not disown her nicoe, her own flesh and blood.

From this gathering of back-grounds, Irish and Indian, black and white, these two remarkable grandparents emerged. Robert Fitzgerald fought for the Union and came down to North Carolina Until now the field has been left open to enthusiasts and publi - Atlantologists, as they have been called.

Plato, who gave the original de-scription of this "island Atlantis," which was "a power that insolently advanced against Europe and Asia together, mounting its attack from outside — from the Atlantic Ocean," wrote more than 2,300 years ago and gave the world a converse of the control of the c cept which has fascinated occult-ists, mystics and religious fanatics for centuries. Whether it ever existed is still a question. As an allegory, it is marvelous.

Ramage suggests that Plato in-vented the story and that the cruption of Thera (now Santorini) may have provided some seed of the tale. Whether it is myth, wholly im-aginative legend, or based on some real event, however remote or distant, the scientific evidence for the existence of Atlantis is skimpy. Pla-to described it in such detail that with its concentric circles, it would be instantly recognizable.

BRIDGE

On the diagramed deal North and South followed a bidding sequence that started with an artificial oneclub bid and continued with two asking bids from North with hearts agreed on as trump. It took the partnership much too high. West led the club king, and could have defeated the slam by shifting to a spade. However he believed that South's trumps were solid, and that it might be important to stop a spade rull in the dummy. He therefore shifted to a trump.

South won with the ace, cashed the diamond ace collecting the queen, and ruffed a club. He then drew trumps and made the winning guess in diamonds by finessing the ten. One diamond ruff established the suit, and the spade ace was still in the dummy to provide an entry for the diamond winners. The slam was home.

"Cut. We're going to have to do again. Go out and find another dog that won't chew up the Constitution of the United States."

Francis Rogallo

By Angus Phillips TITTY HAWK, N.C. (WP) Thirty years ago Francis Rogallo and his wife Gertrude invented a new kind of flying machine and the world said That was in 1948, when World War II was fresh in America's memory. Rogallo had been working for the government for 12 years, largely on military air-craft design. He wanted a change of pace.

"We felt that when the war was over it was time to get back to trying to improve aircraft that everyone could use," he said

What came to Rogallo's mind then was a better kind of wing. That's the difference between a surface buggy and a flying machine," he said. "the wings, that's what makes it fly."

Large Wings

For two years he pondered weight and mass and lift and drag. We wanted an aircraft that would fly slowly. For that we needed large wings, and they had to be light. A very large, very light wing that's rigio is going to be very fragile, too.

"It occurred to me that hy making it flexible instead of rig-square of stiffened cloth or paper with no stays or supports at all. Properly shaped in bat-wing form, it flies.

In a moderately complex form it's the hang glider, a toy that be-gat a sport. But no one figured that out right away.

Or any other use, for that matter. Rogallo took the new wing to his bosses at the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics (later to become NASA). They told him he could keep working on it - on his own

Meanwhile, Rogallo and his wife and their four kids plugged away at home. They built mod-els and tested them in a homemade wind tunnel in the attic. In a short time they came up with the Flexi-Kite . a simple, un-stayed square of plastic faminate over cotton netting. They mark-eted it and sold several thou-

But Rogallo had higger ideas: powered, man-carrying machines; gliding cargo bearers: kites that could be attached to cars to carry them over streams and ponds.

He got a patent. He kept showing it around. But nobody listened, Until Sputnik.

Suddenly his wing had a use. The space industry needed a way to get its hardware back to earth and the Rogallo wing, which offered directed flight plus soft landings, looked good. Engineers all over the country Engineers all over the country began toying with the wing. The space return didn't pan out, but the interest generated by the revival of the Rogallo wing started things happening — and before long people were jumping off mountains with Rogallo wings strapped to their backs. From 1948 to 1958 Rogallo showed his design to the govern-ment to military aircraft build-ers, to schools, anybody I thought might be interested. But no one would seriously consider it as a man-carrying aircraft." Rogallo, for one, still thinks his wing would have been a better way to land spacecraft than a dunk in the ocean under a para-

But, he said, "what they wanted was the quickest way and the parachute was it."

By 1960 manufacturers of military equipment were building powered Rogallo-wing, one-man gliders, and a picture of one was on the cover of Mechanix Illus-trated. The Washington Post, in a 1961 article, listed the following likely benefits of the inventor's 13-year-old brainstorm:

"Combat personnel and cargo carriers, winged ambulances and utility vehicles for reconnaissance, wire laying and liaison missions. Additionally, the flexible wing concept is ideally suited to a variety of drone applica-tions including targets, decoys and as gatherers of meteorological data."

Other suggested uses at that time: air drops, radio-controlled glide bombers carrying a war-head, a means of extending the range of cargo delivery and bombardment rockets.

None of that came to be. In fact, the only known uses that developed for the Rogallo wing have been the Flexi-Kite, still marketed by one of Rogallo's danghters, the hang glider and the para-sail, used by sport parachutists as a directable, gliding chute

Out of all these suggested and actual developments Rogallo has made, he says, not a nickel. "We were just so anxious to get peo-ple to use the damn thing after 10 years that when they finally started experimenting the last thing we wanted to do was discourage them with our patent.

Now Rogallo is retired. He left NASA in 1970, when the space program was the target of cost eutbacks and older employees were getting hints about leaving. He lives in a comfortable home outside Kitty Hawk, where aviation began.

He has two hang gliders in the basement, and once a month or so, when the weather's right, he drives the five miles down to Jockey's Ridge and jumps off the giant dunes with the rest of the glider pilots. Only John Harris, who runs the hang gliding school there, knows who he

"I'm really not very good." said Rogallo. But he knows how it works.

PEOPLE: Blind, Disabled ret Hits Record Jackpot

James Schelich is blind, and disabled with wounds received in the Korean War, but the handicap didn't slow him down in Las Vegas. He hit the biggest slot machine jackpot in history at the Flamingo Hilton Hotel — $275,000. The 48-year-old Schelich says he'd been playing the dollar machine for about an hour hefore those five 7s lined up. Presented with the big prize, he could only say "fantastic." Schelich, who lives in a nursing home. says most of his winnings will go to charity.

A geologist bent on hoodwinking a professional rival created the Piltdown Man fraud, a hoax involving a fake prehistoric skull that was considered a significant scientifie find for four decades. Sir Arthur Smith Woodward and many other distinguished scientists proclaimed the 1914 "discovery of the skull genuine. Smith Woodward died in 1944 still believing it was authentic. But persistent suspicions about the skull were confirmed in 1953 when tests revealed that the jawbone was that of a young orangutan and one of the teeth had been colored with oil paint. The cranium was judged to be human, but of a relatively recent date. A tape recording by a now dead scientist pins the hoax on William Sollas, professor of geology at Oxford University, according to the British Press Association. Smith Woodward, keeper of geology at the British Museum and a man with whom Sollas had feuded, was the victim of the hoax. The Press Association reported that a 20-minute tape made this year by Sollas' successor, and one-time aide, Professor James Douglas, indicates Sollas recruited amateur paleontologist Charles Dawson for the undertaking. It was Dawson who claimed finding the skull in a chalk pit near Piltdown in Sussex. He was honored in the scientific name assigned to Piltdown Man - Ecanthropus Dawsoni Douglas, who died in February at age 93, is reported to have said in the tape that Sollas knew Dawson well and had received from him a chemical that was used to stain and "age the skull. Sollas never exposer the fraud to humiliate his riva because he apparently "felt un able to reveal the hoax when h saw all the other eminent name that joined with Smith Wood ward in authenticating the find according to the account.
